Teen Ambassador Program

One Earth Writing, a nonprofit that connects teens across racial, religious and socioeconomic divides through writing, is accepting applications for its 2017-2018 Ambassadors programs.

Teenagers (grades 7-12) are invited to submit a writing sample and letter of application by Sept. 25 at www.oneearthwriting.org/ambassadors/apply.

One Earth Writing Ambassadors are teenagers interested in exploring their writing talent through a lens of identity. They are open-minded youth with a desire to lead, who will participate in regular writing workshops led by One Earth Writing CEO/Founder Lynne Golodner, as well as co-facilitate peer workshops.

There will be two Ambassadors programs accepted for the 2017-2018 academic year. A maximum of 15 students are accepted to each class, at no cost to teens. This fall's program is sponsored in part by a donation from Varnum Law.

Interested teens must write a one-page letter explaining why they are interested in becoming a One Earth Writing Ambassador, why they will be a unique and interesting fit for this diverse group of student writers, and what they hope to do with the leadership and writing skills they gain with One Earth Writing.

For information, call (248) 376-0406 or email lynne@oneearthwriting.org. ☛
